 her to bring 30,000 fresh troops to the aid of the over-aided and over-payment of certain pecuniary re-rendered by Russia to her "great old" neighbor during her no less an-death struggle with the French in 1812.

It was, and not till then, that "Great Britain" declared her policy. The fleet was despatched to Constantinople, with orders to men and guns if necessary for the aid of the city.

It completed the discomfiture of the Russians, who on the signature of the treaty returned (leaving all the honors vanquished) to their frosty home having fulfilled the ambitions of Queen Catherine.

And so like ourselves expect to feast on Ploewna's smoldering battlements those mighty unprompted defenses will prepare themselves for disappointment, and perhaps so best. Any might depict the scene; but what could paint the iron energy, nobility and sterling valor of the gallant heroes.

Since it is that the panorama before us presents not the siege itself, but only at sortie of the garrison; the unique action of the battle ground and the picture of the fierce struggle supplying the artist with the choicest materials for the exercise of his unquestionable talent.

Taking our stand upon a high and just outside the first lines of defence we have the valley of the Vid like a billiard table at our feet.

 Beneath us flows the river, tinged with ochre. Yonder to the front and left the Russian position as strong as the legible city at our back over which "half moon" still waves defiantly.

 elbow, while the other is being starved out.

 front line are the most striking feature of the scene.

Around about, the ground is covered with dead and dying, while crossing the edge at the head of his bodyguard comes the wounded Pasha. Alongside is the shepherd's hut where he surrendered his sword "with all the honors of war." "Flesh and blood could do no more. Human reason could ask no grander effort. And that intelligence and bravery could do against brute force had been tried, and ended in vain; and there stand the defeated, waiting for their victors." So says the glorious man before us; so says the painted canvas before us; so says contemporary history; so says the verdict of mankind, and Mr. Philopoteaux is to be congratulated on the very beautiful and impressive manner in which he records these impressive scenes. Appealing to the eye is speaking to the heart.

NEW YORK VIEWS ON ARGENTINE AFFAIRS.

Two months ago the known state of financial affairs in the Argentine Republic was such that no experienced observer would have been surprised at a sudden and violent collapse in the entire market. The situation had become critical, when the worst fears were temporarily allayed by the appointment of a new Finance Minister in whom the foreign and local financiers had greater confidence than his predecessor. The gold premium was then far from 150. It came down rapidly on the announcement that the issues of Government notes would be suspended, part of the current note circulation called in, and the putting forth of the irregular bank issues known as "cedulas" promptly stopped. The storm which had seemed to be imminent was followed by a period of calm, which was partly occasioned, so far as sensational gossip was concerned, by the diversion of public attention to the financial and political events in Brazil. The reassurance which followed Senor Paulista's announcements had an unfortunate result in encouraging renewed speculation in Argentine stocks at Buenos Ayres—a movement doubtless encouraged by the British speculative investors, who hold large amounts of Argentine securities and are anxious for a favorable market in which to dispose of them. The movement, however, has led to another sharp advance in the gold premium, which at latest advances had gone above 130. This has been accompanied by a fall in the price of all the so-curities of the market. Meanwhile, the day is approaching for the calling in of a portion of the outstanding Government note currency. What effect this will have upon so agitated a money market it is not easy to predict with certainty. If the English investors have succeeded in making a good share of their surplus Argentine investments, so that they will no longer have the same inducement for giving aggressive support to the Republic's finances, the situation is in every way critical. At present the London prices for Argentine Government loans are about where they were two months ago.

 good correspondent, and best available for commercial work, was situated in a banking firm in London. Highest references. Salary moderate to commence. Address D. 2.

Exchange was quoted weaker again today, and we heard of francs passed at 4.38 at Paris. The National Bank drew in paper at 234 francs and 22 1/2, which makes the weakest all the more curious, since it should strengthen the market, whereas it seems to always have the contrary effect.
